

A SWARM MOMENT

February 12, 2013

-A True Story

A homeless returned to a home where for quite some time, he had been the recipient of meals from a benevolent house wife; who in compassion started feeding the man every day at 2pm. But on this day, he only received the news of her passing, by her husband who came to answered the door.

The husband now left a single parent of six children the youngest of who was an eighteen month old toddler; informed the homeless man that he did not have the time to prepare his now regular 2pm meal; and while doing so failed to notice that his eighteen month old toddler had climb into the open refrigerator, and the door had closed on her.

The father offered the man two dollars instead, eager to send the man on his way, and return to tending his family. The homeless man persisted and even refused to take the two dollars and go on his way. Seeing that the man would not leave, he invited him into the kitchen, opened the refrigerator door to begin to prepare food for him; where he found his young child turning blue from the cold.

Point of Story:

Jesus said, be careful, how you treat people, you may be entertaining a stranger unaware. What if the angel looked to be homeless, and could save you or the life of your loved one?

Note:

And just think, some neighbors don't want people to even knock on their door; for any reason.
